三、 閱讀測驗

Think of the world as a giant ball with a belt around its middle. This middle part of the world is the equator. Forests that cover much of the land there are thick and green. Heavy rains that often soak the earth make the trees grow quickly and tall. This huge umbrella of trees protects the floor of the rain forest from the blazing hot sun.

It is difficult to live in the rain forest with its constant heat, thick growth of trees, and rain. In the rain-forest villages, people live in straw-roofed houses with open sides that are perfect for this climate. Heat and rain are kept out while fresh air flows in and out.

Most people living in a rain forest are farmers who move from one part of the forest to another to grow their crops. The people farm the same piece of land until the land is no longer useful. Then they must move. The people also must move when the rains wash away good soil.

Travel in the rain forest is usually by water. Canoes take people along the rivers to trade their crops for other things they need. There are not many roads or railroads in a rain forest because they are difficult to build. It takes a lot of hard work and strong machines to cut through the thick tangle of trees, shrubs and creeping vines.
